

10. Sentiment; perception.
You are too great to be by me gain'd.
Your spirit is too true, your tears too certain. Shakespeare.
11. Eagerness; desire.
God has changed mens tempers with the times, and made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down. South.
12. Man of activity; man of life, fire and enterprise.
The watry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shakespeare.
13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind.
A French word, happily growing obsolete.
Such spirits as he desired to please, such would I chuse for my judges. Dryden.
14. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; the purest part of the body bordering, says Sydenham, on immateriality.
In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.
Though thou didst but jest:
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakespeare's King John.
When I sit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out Into my story. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
Alas! when all our lamps are burn'd,
Our bodies wafted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which yield men's wits both help and ornament;
What can we know, or what can we discern? Davies.
To sing thy praise, would heav'n my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song,
Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays. Dryden.
By means of the curious lodgment and inoculation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed.
Derham.
- In some fair body thus the secret soul
With spirits feeds, with vigour fills the whole;
Each motion guides, and ev'ry nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in the effects remains.
The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits. Swift.
15. The likeness; essential qualities.
Italian pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a descending light, which of all other doth set off mens faces in their truest spirit. Watson.
16. Any thing eminently pure and refined.
Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself. Shakespeare.
17. That which hath power or energy.
All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them;
but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside, and whereunto the rest do resort; but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow.
Bacon's Natural History.
18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation.
What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many differing things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor. Boyle.
All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach. Temple.
In distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil; if it will, it is spirit.
Arbutnot on Aliments.
19. It may be observed, that in the old poets spirit was commonly a monosyllable, being written spright or sprite.
The charge thereof unto a courteous knight Commanded was. Spenser.
- TO SPIRIT, v. a.

tending his mirth and spiritfulness. Harvey.
- SPIRITLESS, adj. [from spirit] Dejected; low; deprived of vigour; wanting courage; depressed.
A man to faint, so spiritless,
So dull, to dead in look, so woe begone,
Drew Priam's curtain. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
Of their wanted vigour left them drain'd, Exhausted, spiritless, afflicted, fall'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Nor did all Rome, grown spiritless, supply
A man that for bold truth durst bravely die.
Art thou so base, so spiritless a slave?
Not so he bore the fate to which you doom'd him. Smith.
- SPIRITUOUS, adj. [from spirit.] 1. Refined; defecated; advanced near to spirit.
More refin'd, more spirituous and pure,
As nearer to him plac'd, or nearer tending. Milton.
2. Fine; ardent; active.
- SPIRITUOUSNESS, n. f. [from spirituous.] Fineness and activity of parts.
They, notwithstanding the great thinness and spirituousness of the liquor, did, before they broke, lift up the upper surface, and for a moment form a thin film like a small hemisphere. Huygens.
- SPIRITUAL, adj. [from spiritus, Fr. from spirit.] 1. Distinct from matter; immaterial; incorporeal.
Echo is a great argument of the spiritual essence of sounds; for if it were corporeal, the repercussion should be created by like instruments with the original sound. Bacon.
Both visibles and audibles in their working emit no corporeal substance into their mediums, but only carry certain spiritual species. Bacon.
All creatures, as well spiritual as corporeal, declare their absolute dependence upon the first author of all beings, the only self-existent God. Beaumont.
2. Mental; intellectual.
The same disaster has invaded his spirituals; the passions rebel; and there are so many governours, that there can be no government. South.
3. Not gross; refined from external things; relative only to the mind.
Some who pretend to be of a more spiritual and refined religion, spend their time in contemplation, and talk much of communion with God. Calamy's Sermons.
4. Not temporal; relating to the things of heaven; ecclesiastical.
Place man in some public society, civil or spiritual. Hosker.
Thou art reverend,
Touching thy spiritual function, not thy life. Shakespeare.
I have made an offer to his majesty,
Upon our spiritual convocation,
As touching France, to give a greater sum
Than ever at one time the clergy did. Shakespeare.
- Spiritual armour, able to resist Satan's assaults. Milton.
The clergy's business lies among the laity; nor is there a more effectual way to forward the salvation of mens souls, than for spiritual persons to make themselves as agreeable as they can in the conversations of the world. Swift.
- SPIRITUALITY, n. f. [from spiritual.] 1. Incorporeity; immateriality; essence distinct from matter.
If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then of all other the most subtle and pure. Raigh.
2. Intellectual nature.
A pleasure made for the soul; suitable to its spirituality, and equal to all its capacities. South's Sermons.
3. [from spiritualis, Fr.] Acts independent of the body; pure acts of the soul; mental refinement.
Many secret indispositions and aversions to duty will steal upon the soul, and it will require both time and close application of mind to recover it to such a frame, as shall dispose for the spiritualities of religion. South's Sermons.
4. That which belongs to any one as an ecclesiastick.
Of common right, the dean and chapter are guardians of the spiritualities, during the vacancy of a bishoprick. Hyde.
- SPIRITUALITY, n. f. [from spiritual.] Ecclesiastical body.
We of the spirituality
Will raise your highness such a mighty sum,
As never did the clergy at one time. Shakespeare.
- SPIRITUALIZATION, n. f. [from spiritualize.] The act of spiritualizing.
To SPIRITUALIZE, v. a. [from spiritualis, Fr. from spirit.] To refine the intellect; to purify from the feculencies of the world;
This would take it much out of the care of the soul, to spiritualize and replenish it with good works. Hamm.

- We begin our survey from the lowest dregs of sense, and to ascend to our more spiritualized selves. Glauville.
As to the future glory in which the body is to partake, that load of earth which now engages to corruption, must be calcined and spiritualized, and thus be clothed upon with glory. Decay of Piety.
If man will act rationally, he cannot admit any competition between a momentary satisfaction, and an everlasting happiness, as great as God can give, and our spiritualized capacities receive. Rogers's Sermon.
- SPIRITUALLY, adv. [from spiritual] Without corporeal grossness; with attention to things purely intellectual.
In the same degree that virgins live more spiritually than other persons, in the same degree is their virginity a more excellent state. Taylor's Rule of holy Living.
- SPIRITUOUS, adj. [from spiritus, Fr. from spirit.] 1. Having the quality of spirit, tenuity and activity of parts.
More refin'd, more spirituous and pure,
As to him nearer tending. Milton.

spritta, Swedish, to fly out. Lye.] To spring out in a sudden stream; to stream out by intervals.
Bottling of beer, while new and full of spirit, so that it spirited when the bottle is taken forth, maketh the drink more quick and windy. Bacon's Natural History.
Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Springs in the garden's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.
- TO SPIRIT, v. a. To throw out in a jet.
When weary Proteus
Retir'd for shelter to his wonted caves,
His finny flocks about his shepherd play,
And rowling round him, spirit the bitter sea. Dryden.
When rains the passage hide
Of the loose stones spirit up a muddy tide Beneath thy careless foot. Gay.
- TO SPIRIT, v. a. [A corruption of spirit.] To dissipate.
The terraqueous globe would, by the centrifugal force of that motion, be soon dissipated and spirited into the circumambient space, was it not kept together by this noble contrivance of the Creator. Derham's Physico-Theology.
- SPIRIT, adj. [from spira.] 1. Pyramidal.
Waste sandy valleys, once perplex'd with thorn,
The spirey firs, and shapely box adorn. Pope's Messiah.
In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
These moss-grown domes with spirey turrets crown'd,
Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light;
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.
2. Wreathed; curled.
Hid in the spirey volumes of the snake,
I lurk'd within the covert of a brake. Dryden.
- SEISS, adj. [from spissus, Latin.] Close; firm; thick.
From his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued this spiss and dense, yet polished; this copious, yet concise treasure of the variety of languages. Brewster.
- SPISSITUDE, n. f. [from spissus, Latin.] Grossness; thickness.
Drawing wine or beer from the lees, called racking, it will clarify the looser; for though the lees keep the drink in heart, and make it lasting, yet they cast up some spissitude. Bacon.
Spissitude is subdued by acrid things, and acrimony by in-spissating. Arbutnot on Aliments.
- SPIR, n. f. [from spira, Saxon; spit, Dutch; spedo, Italian.] 1. A long prong on which meat is driven to be turned before the fire.
A goodly city is this Antium;
'Tis I that made thy widows: then know me not,
Left that thy wives with spits, and boys with stones
In puny battle slay me. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
They may be contrived to the moving of sails in a chimney corner, the motion of which may be applied to the turning of a spit. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
With Peggy Dixon thoughtful sit, Contriving for the pot and spit. Swift.
2. Such a depth of earth as is pierced by one action of the spade.
Where the earth is washed from the quick, face it with the first spit of earth dug out of the ditch. Mortimer.
- TO SPIT, v. a. Preterite spat; participle spits, or spitted, [from the noun.] 1. To put upon a spit.
I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body Upon a rapier's point. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

2. To thrust through.
I spitted frogs, I crush'd a heap of emmets. Dryden.
TO SPIT, v. a. [from spira, Saxon; spytter, Danish.] To eject from the mouth.
A large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death, and mountains, rocks and seas.
Shakespeare's King John.
Commissions which compel from each
The sixth part of his substance, makes bold mouths,
Tongues spit their duties out, and cold hearts freeze Allegiance in them. Shakespeare.
- TO SPIT, v. n. To throw out spittle or moisture of the mouth.
Very good orators, when they are here, will spit. Shakespeare.
I dare meet Surrey,
And spit upon him whilst I say he lies. Shakespeare's Rich. II.
You spurn'd me such a day, Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
The watry kingdom, whose ambitious head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come. Shakespeare.
He spat on the ground, made clay of the spittle, and anointed the eyes of the blind man. John ix. 6.
A maid came from her father's house to one of the tribunals of the Gentiles, and declaring herself a Christian, spit in the judge's face. South's Sermons.
A drunkard men abhor, and would even spit at him, were it not for fear he should something more than spit at them.
South's Sermons.
- Spit on your finger and thumb, and pinch the snuff till the candle goes out. Swift's Rules for the Servants.
- SPIITAL, n. f. [Corrupted from hospital.] A charitable foundation. In use only in the phrase, a spital sermon, and not the spital.
- TO SPITCHCOCK, v. a. To cut an eel in pieces and roast him.
Of this word I find no good etymology.
No man lards salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spit-cocked eel. King.
- SPIITE, n. f. [from spis, Dutch; despit, French.] 1. Malice; rancour; hate; malignity; malevolence.
This breeding rather spite than shame in her, or, if it were a shame, a shame not of the fault, but of the repulse, she did thirst for a revenge. Sidney.
Bewray they did their inward boiling spites
Each stirring others to revenge their cause. Daniel.
Done all to spite
The great Creator; but their spite still serves His glory to augment. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Be gone, ye critics, and restrain your spites,
Codrus writes on, and will for ever write. Pope.
2. SPITE OF, or IN SPITE OF. Notwithstanding; in defiance of.
It is often used without any malignity of meaning.
Blessed be such a preacher, whom God made use of to speak a word in season, and saved me in spite of the world, the devil, and myself. South.
In spite of me I love, and see too late
My mother's pride must find my mother's fate. Dryden.
For thy lov'd sake, spite of my boding fears,
I'll meet the danger which ambition brings. Rowe.
My father's fate,
In spite of all the fortitude that shines
Before my face in Cato's great example, Subdues my soul, and fills my eyes with tears. Addison's Cato.
In spite of all applications the patient grew worse every day. Arbutnot.
- TO SPITE, v. a. [from the noun.] 1. To mischief; to treat maliciously; to vex; to thwart ma-lignantly.
Beguill'd, divorced, wronged, spighted, slain,
Most detestable death, by thee. Shakespeare.
I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love,
To spight a raven's heart within a dove. Shakespeare.
2. To fill with spite; to offend.
So with play did he a good while fight against the fight of Zelmane, who, more spited with that courtesy, that one that did nothing should be able to resist her, burned away with choler any motions which might grow out of her own sweet disposition. Sidney.
Darius, spited at the magi, endeavoured to abolish not only their learning but their language. Temple.
- SPITEFUL, adj. [from spite and full.] Malicious; malignant.
The Jews were the deadliest and spitefullest enemies of Christianity that were in the world, and in this respect their orders to be shunned. Hosker.
All you have done
Hath been but for a wayward son, Spightful and wrathful. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Contempt is a thing made up of an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. South's Sermons.
The spiteful stars have shed their venom down,
And now the peaceful planets take their turn. Dryden.
24 U
